Hello again Ms. Cunningham,

Thanks for the additional information about where the data is being pulled from. I have reviewed the data for the 2010-2011 school year that is current posted for the Caesar Rodney School District on the Department of Education's web site.

I have not been given the opportunity to review the data in that report, so unfortunately I cannot verify the validity of the report.

Again, without having an opportunity to review the data I cannot provide any additional information to you about any unique spending or reporting requirements for our district by your deadline of May 22, 2012.

I respectfully request the opportunity to review and verify the data before the Lieutenant Governor's office issues a report on the Caesar Rodney School District's spending (2010-2011 school year).

Thanks,

~ Ada

Ada,

We have received some questions and where we will get the data for our upcoming spending report. Every year, we pull our information from the information provided by school districts and provided to the public on the DE Department of Education's website. The data reflected in this report is reported by the school districts themselves, and the categories into which the expenditures fall are categories created and defined by the United States Department of Education (www.nces.ed.gov). The information is neither generated by nor categorized by the Lieutenant Governor's office. The data for the 2010-2011 school year is current posted with the profile for each district on the Department of Education's web site.

For those that have questions about how the report looks, please visit the report issued last year.

Thanks,
Emily

Hello Ms. Cunningham,

Thank you for the opportunity to provide information about spending and coding in the districts.

The upcoming report will be the first one pulling the data from FSF (the new State financial system), which has more coding fields than DFMS (the previous State financial system). To my knowledge, I have not been provided any information about how the report will be formatted or which FSF codes will be used to sort and group the data.

It is difficult to know what information we may need to provide without clarification on how the data will be pulled for the report.

Do you have any information or can you put me in contact with someone that does?

Thanks again,

~ Ada
